Further information regarding nominations and the role of the Honours Committee

- Nominations for awards should be made on the appropriate form (included on the webpage describing the award) accompanied, if required, by the CV and/or list of publications of the candidate, or links to further information.
- The Honours Committee will not consider additional letters of recommendation or support and so these should not be solicited or sent.
- When making a nomination, please consider the award criteria carefully and ensure that it is met – the nomination form is designed to guide you through the process.
- During each award round, the Honours Committee considers nominations based on information provided and its own research. It does not have the authority to introduce additional candidates and therefore it is important that individual fellows, members of our committees and sections, special interest groups and local groups, take seriously the need to make appropriate nominations, and that nominations are actively sought from appropriate outside bodies and individuals.
- After making recommendations for awards, the Honours Committee has the authority to decide whether to carry forward any unsuccessful nominations to the succeeding year. If it does so, the original nominators will be contacted and asked if they wish to update the nomination.
- The Honours Committee will also review these published guidelines in the light of experience and make any recommendations for amendments to Council.
- The formal task of the Honours Committee is to make recommendations to Council, which then takes the decision to make the awards.
- In any given year, no individual may be awarded more than one of the Society's medals, and no medal may be awarded to more than one individual.
- Certain awards are given only to fellows of the Society. For these awards, fellowship (which may include Honorary Fellowship) is required at the time of nomination.
